

Economic Bulletin.

12 March 2020

Preview of NZ Q4 GDP and current account.

- We expect a 0.6% rise in GDP for the December quarter, as the New Zealand economy rebounded from a slowdown in the first half of last year.
- Conditions were mixed over the quarter, with softness in the primary sectors offset by growth in services.
- We expect the current account deficit to narrow to 3.0% of GDP.
- Next week's data releases will no doubt be overshadowed by the rapidly developing impacts of the Covid-19 outbreak. However, they provide a useful snapshot of the strength of the economy heading into this shock.

The quarterly national accounts are the most dated of the major economic data releases, and next week's releases for the December quarter will no doubt be overshadowed by the evolving Covid-19 pandemic. Nevertheless, it's useful to have a sense of the economy's starting point as it headed into this shock.

We expect a modest 0.6% rise in December quarter GDP. The pace of growth clearly slowed over the first half of 2019, but it regained some momentum in the second half. Supportive monetary and fiscal policy were already in place by then, and prior to the Covid-19 outbreak we were expecting an acceleration in growth this year. As it stands, we're now expecting to see a substantial hit to activity in the near term, followed by a period of very strong growth as the outbreak passes and the economy returns to its previous trend.

Our forecast for the December quarter is stronger than the 0.4% increase that the Reserve Bank forecast in its February Monetary Policy Statement. However, those forecasts were based on a mild and short-lived impact from Covid-19, so any upside surprise on the economy's starting point will be far outweighed by a downgrade to the outlook for 2020.

Q4 GDP: 19 March, 10:45am.

We expect a 0.6% rise in the production measure of GDP for the December quarter. That would see growth slow to 2.3% for the 2019 year, compared to 3.2% growth over 2018.

The performance across the economy was mixed, with softness in the primary and good-producing sectors. Agriculture and food manufacturing were held back by a dip in milk production, and a pullback in meat processing relative to a very strong September quarter. Forestry volumes continued to be hit by the mid-2019 slump in log prices, and oil and gas extraction is likely to have been down.

Against these, we expect to see gains across a range of services. Transport is expected to bounce back from a weak September quarter, finance and real estate services benefited from the upturn in house sales, and spending on public services continues to grow strongly. Retail sales saw a more modest 0.7% rise after a 2.4% jump in September.

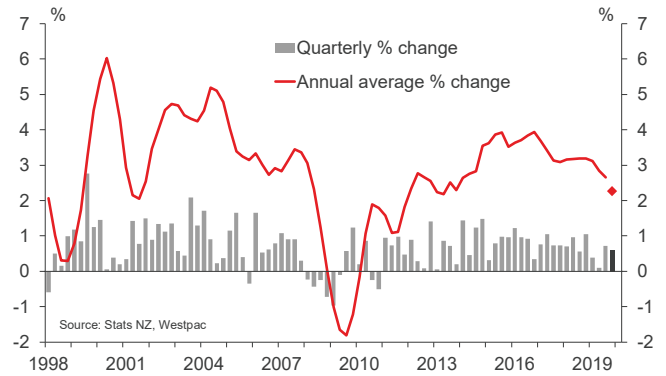

Q4 current account: 18 March, 10:45am.

We expect the annual current account deficit to narrow to 3.0% of GDP in December, compared to 3.3% in September. The expected narrowing of the deficit is due to an improvement in both the trade and investment income balances.

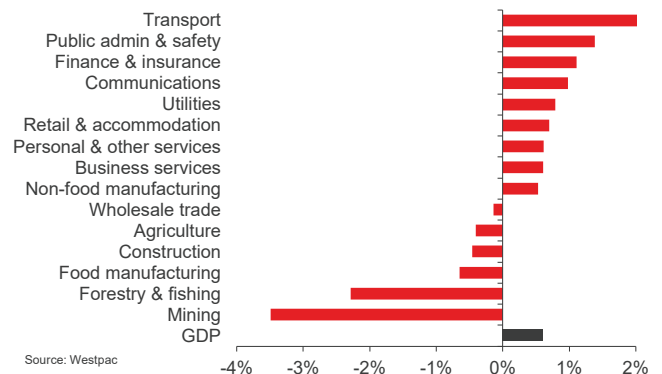

In seasonally adjusted terms, we expect the goods trade deficit to narrow to around $500m, compared to around $1.3bn in the September quarter. Export prices rose, and export volumes rebounded from a sharp drop in September. This appears to have largely been an issue with the timing of shipments, with inventories building up and then running down over the same period. The services trade balance improved slightly, with tourist spending down but other services exports up.

We expect the investment income deficit to be slightly larger compared to the September quarter, but substantially smaller than it was a year earlier. In particular, the outflow of profits from overseas-owned firms has come off its highs in recent quarters.
